Text: Disability is not inability.

I have watched with dismay the influx of beggars in our streets under the umbrella of poverty. Ghana together with other African countries, have serious humanitarian problems which need to be tackled with urgency. For the past few years, the activities of beggars on our streets have increased sharply with their consequent effects being severe. Most of these beggars hide under the cloud of disabilities.

A walk through the principal streets of our city centres will reveal a massive influx of beggars. Most of the beggars are indeed handicapped in one way or the other. While some of them have a leg or an arm amputated or deformed, the rest are either partially or completely blind. These unfortunate situations really undermine their progress in society hence compelling them to go begging for alms. Most of these people, especially the lame and the fully blind are left at the mercy of the weather and speeding drivers.

The questions that many people ask are whether such people do not have family members or whether these family members recognise only the rich and have no regard for the poor. If these less endowed people were rich, would they be left unattended to? The time has come for society to be very responsible.

One unfortunate thing some disabled people fail to realise is the inborn talent deposited in them. God in heaven does not do things in vain. Some of them fail to realise what they could do in their present state to help develop the country. In view of this, they resort to depending on the surplus of things for their livelihood.

Most often, we are made to believe that these people are hopeless. This is never true, because research has revealed that some of the beggars we see on our roads are employers: the able-bodied men who carry them around are their employees. Due to the good nature of their business – begging – most of them have vowed never to quit such jobs.

I honestly do not blame the beggars but the givers. It is very advisable to teach people how to fish rather than offering them fish to eat. The more we give them, the more they continue begging on the street and continue to be a burden on society.
